Dorit Donoviel, Ph.D.
"Space: The Final Healthcare Frontier"

As Deputy Chief Scientist, Dr. Donoviel oversees the diverse portfolio of science and technology research and development projects at the National Space Biomedical Research Institute (NSBRI) that address the challenges faced by humans in space. She leads the NSBRI Industry Forum and the SMARTCAP grant program that funds and mentors small startup companies. She is also the Director of the Laboratory for Biomedical Innovations where she evaluates new technologies and countermeasures that have the potential to transform medical care in space and on Earth.

A published scientist herself, Dr. Donoviel interfaces with NASA at many levels ensuring programmatic alignment with the highest risks to human space flight while safeguarding scientific excellence. She is the recipient of several NASA Human Research Program awards and the NSBRI Outstanding Leadership Award, and serves on many advisory and review boards, and lectures about the space life sciences both nationally and internationally.
